

Our Q&A Facilitator

Ticky Fullerton

- Ticky Fullerton is a longstanding journalist at the ABC. She is currently Presenter for Lateline Business. In her twelve years with the ABC, Ticky has been an investigative reporter for Four Corners, the presenter for the national farming program Landline, and she was previously a reporter for Lateline, working in the Canberra press gallery and in business journalism. In August 2004, she won the Australian Government Peter Hunt Eureka Prize for "Environmental Journalism".
- Prior to journalism, Ticky was an associate director with investment bank Credit Suisse First Boston. She spent ten years with the group, first in London working in the Euromarkets, and then Sydney, where she was involved in capital raisings and advisory business for both governments and corporates.
- Ticky is the author of "Watershed", now in its second print. "Watershed" was the first comprehensive book on the future challenges facing Australia in water and the tensions between the many stakeholders in our water future: farmers, businessmen, indigenous groups, consumers, greens, miners and nature itself.
- Ticky is a director of the CRC for Irrigation futures, mother of one, and has a law degree from Oxford University.